A Dream Called Europe - Photo exhibition

ANSa and Fondazione Palazzo Strozzi – Cortile Palazzo Strozzi

This photo exhibition follows the success of the ‘Women on the March’ one, organised in the context of the 2016 edition of The State of the Union. This year’s exhibition will shed light on the every-day life of migrants in Europe and the various daily challenges they have to face. Often secluded from many social aspects of our European societies, they are still an integral part of the latter and sometimes protest against structural injustices. The exhibition promises to display all of the different facets of this complex phenomenon.

Type: Open to the general public
Location: Cortile di Palazzo Strozzi, Piazza Strozzi 1, Florence

Over the past two centuries, Africa played a very important role for Europe and vice versa; albeit for different reasons, this will be the case for the coming decades. The European Union and its Member States can hardly ignore this continent: not only is it just across the Mediterranean sea, but it has - and will continue to have - the youngest demographic profile in the world, while European population is increasingly ageing and diminishing in size. The recent migratory crisis shows blatantly that what happens in apparently remote areas of sub-Saharan Africa can have an impact on European domestic politics, by influencing partisan competition, and triggering new dividing lines in our political systems. Furthermore, like in the case of the Ebola pandemic, geopolitical turmoil taking place somewhere in the Horn of Africa or in Central Africa cannot be easily sealed-off. In an increasingly interdependent world, the future of European democracy also depends on how we interact with countries outside of Europe and Africa - let us not forget it - is a very close neighbor.

Against this backdrop, the workshop intends to discuss recent developments in four major policy areas that appear crucial for the future of EU-Africa relations, particularly for the political implications at the supra national, and the national levels of government. The four areas are security, migration, trade and cooperation development. In addressing the main issues that are at stake in each of these fields the core question that needs to be investigated is the following: is the EU effectively pursuing a forward-looking strategy aimed at establishing a mutually reinforcing partnership, as reflected in the official discourse? Or, has the EU been trapped - in spite of its commitments - in a backward looking strategy, that still reflects the asymmetrical relations typical of colonial times, and inadvertently favors the position of emerging illiberal powers?

Exploring democracy in the 21st century from the perspective of the past: Can the liberty of the ancients be combined with the liberty of the moderns? - Workshop

EUI, Max Weber Programme - Seminar Room 2, Badia Fiesolana

In this panel, Max Weber Fellows from the Departments of History and Civilization and Political and Social Sciences, who are scholars of political theory and intellectual history, ask what we can learn from the European tradition of democratic theory to think about the future of democracy in Europe. In particular, how far are our inherited democratic norms compatible with an EU committed to the norms of the single market and the four freedoms, on the one hand, and ever-closer political as well as economic integration, on the other?

As we shall see, most past thinkers have been critical of elements of one or other or both, suggesting that we must either rethink democracy or rethink the Union if we wish to combine the two. The panel develops chronologically through three linked steps:

On the Liberty of the Ancients

Eniola Anuoluwapo Soyemi, Max Weber Programme, Department of Political and Social Sciences Fellow: Aristotle

Jared Holley, Max Weber Programme, Department of History and Civilization Fellow: Rousseau

On the Liberties of the Moderns

Bruno Leipold, Max Weber Programme Department of Political and Social Sciences Fellow: Marx

Alessandro Bonvini, Max Weber Programme, Department of History and Civilization Fellow: Mazzini

On Combing the Liberties of the Ancients with that of the Moderns in the EU

Jens van't Klooster, Max Weber Programme, Department of Political and Social Sciences Fellow: The Rawls-Van Parijs Debate

Recent developments in the EU Eastern Neighbourhood were met with high political interest in the European Parliament (EP), especially following the Maidan revolution in Ukraine and Russia’s military aggression in the Donbas and in Crimea. This political interest created the space for the EP to develop innovative types of actions aimed at supporting the democratisation and pro-European reform processes in the Eastern Partnership region, especially in the three countries which concluded an Association Agreement with the EU – Ukraine, Moldova and Georgia.

This workshop aims to bring together researchers and EP practitioners who will look at a variety of initiatives taken by the EP in relation with this region since 2014, in particular through the work of parliamentary Committees, inter-parliamentary dialogue as well as mediation and capacity building activities. They will discuss how far these initiatives have been exemplary for a self-empowerment of the EP in the field of external action and their impact on both the inter-institutional dynamics and the effectiveness and coherence of the EU foreign policy as a whole.

Trust in the single market? The case of the EU emissions trading - Roundtable

EUI LIFE SIDE Follow-up Project, FSR Climate and European Association of Environmental and Resource Economists (EAERE) – Sala Europa, Villa Schifanoia

Carbon pricing is widely regarded as a key instrument to achieve the emission reduction targets set by the Paris Agreement. Since the introduction of the European Emission Trading System (EU ETS) in 2005, carbon pricing has grown extensively around the world. The EU ETS is the result of a complex legislative process involving the governments of 31 participating countries, thus providing one of the most interesting examples of democratic participation of EU countries in the design of an EU crucial policy and in the creation of a single market within it. Since its adoption, the EU ETS has faced a number of challenges, including a substantial price fall with allowance prices getting below 5€/ton of CO2 during the economic recession. This has urged European institutions to implement a series of revisions of the system. As a result, after years of low carbon prices, in which trust in the EU ETS was low, the price of the European allowances has risen remarkably following the announcement of the reform of the EU ETS for Phase IV (2021-2030), which was passed in 2018. This confirms the crucial role that expectations can play in anticipating the policy when this is perceived as sufficiently stringent, credible and long-run.

The following questions will be addressed by the event:

- What is the current level of trust by participants and the public opinion in the EU ETS?
- What can be done to further support the credibility of the system and enhance trust in the single market in the context of climate policy?
- How can transparency and MRV (Measurement, reporting and verification) contribute to build trust in climate policy measures in general, and in the EU ETS in particular?
- How can we trigger mutual trust across countries and facilitate the ongoing negotiations on CORSIA and on Article 6 in the Paris Agreement?
- How can scholars and research better bridge with Policy Makers to enhance trust in Climate Policy measures?

Speakers:

Carlo Carraro, Professor (University of Venice), President of the European Association of Environmental and Resource Economists (EAERE) and Director of the International Centre for Climate Governance

Ottmar Edenhofer, Director and Chief Economist, Potsdam Institute for Climate Impact Research, Director of the Mercator Research Institute on Global Commons and Climate Change, Professor, Technische Universität Berlin

How should education approach the European project in a rapidly changing world? - 30 years of Jean Monnet Activities - Conference

Directorate General EAC, European Commission and the EUI – Refettorio, Badia Fiesolana

Global and European political and societal realities change at a dramatic pace. Social science and in particular European studies (different levels of education and research) should reflect these developments. The session will discuss how Education can play a role in tackling democratic deficit, enhancing the citizens' understanding of Europe’s founding values, its history, its institutions, its policies and the benefits it brings about. In the framework of the celebration of the 30th anniversary of the Jean Monnet programme, Director General Christophidou will deliver a keynote introduction on the achievements of the programme that has funded over 5000 projects since 1989 and supports over 1000 universities. Additionally, it benefits half a million students in the field of European studies per year in almost ninety countries. The panel composed of policy makers and academics - including Jean Monnet professors - will then carry forward the debate on how current political and societal trends should be best approached through education as a whole and in particular in the field of European studies. The 2018 Council’s recommendation on “Promoting common values, inclusive education and the European dimension of teaching” should be the starting point of the debate for a topic that is sometimes controversial in Member States. The discussion will touch upon the issue how EU legislation and policies relevant for specific key areas such as engineering, robotics, climate technology that are in constant development and change are and should be even better encompassed in the future in European studies and research. Some structural conditions existing in Europe may hinder the realization of a European area for higher education and research that would be inclusive of a variety of social and national realities. Panellists will discuss how policies and individual institutions, such as the European University Institute as providers of public good for Europe, should address this issue.

Launch of the Voting Advice Application ‘euandi2019’ – Press Conference
Robert Schuman Centre for Advanced Studies, EUI - Sala del Camino, Villa Salviati

Voting Advice Applications (VAA) are found to have an impact on the decision-making of voters in the weeks preceding elections. In this press conference, journalists and the public will meet the researchers behind the EUI Voting Advice Application euandi2019 and gain an insight into the scientific background and the technical functioning of the tool. This interactive online tool is the second pillar of a two-fold project, spaceu2019, aimed at informing European citizens on how to cast an informed vote for the upcoming European elections. Developed in collaboration with the University of Luzern, euandi2019 helps people identify which political parties best represent their views in the upcoming European elections.

For an ever more democratic European Union - Award Ceremony
HAEU Educational Programme and Città Metropolitana di Firenze - Sala Alcide de Gasperi, Villa Salviati

The winners of the student competition “For an ever more democratic European Union”, organised by the Historical Archives of the European Union together with the City of Florence, will be awarded in a public ceremony at Villa Salviati. The competition represents the final stage of the educational programme “The European Elections: For an Active Democracy”, which involved more than 30 classes from 15 upper secondary schools in Florence. Thanks to the HAEU trainers, participants learnt about the history of European integration and the functioning of EU institutions and took part in a workshop focusing on three topics: The institutional reform in the European Union, the European school of the future and the needed actions to tackle climate change. In order to participate in the competition, each class was asked to present an election manifesto for 2019 European Parliament Elections, gathering all students’ proposals to shape the future of Europe. As usual, the last HAEU Educational Programme involved some former Members of the European Parliament, who participated in some of the workshops thanks to the partnership between the Archives and the European Parliament Former Members Association.

Space and democracy - Conference
HAEU and European Space Agency - Sala Alcide de Gasperi, Villa Salviati

Since their development in the mid-20th Century, space activities have played a key role in the balancing of political and technological power among world- and space-leading countries; this role - like the key players in space - has gradually changed and grown through the decades to the extent that today it could be argued that space activities have become an essential driver of and actor in the democratic process.

This event has been organised to mark 30 years of cooperation between the European Space Agency and the European University Institute together with the depositing of the ESA archives with the Historical Archives of the European Union (HAEU). The session will provide an insight into space activities and their role in promoting democracy, with a particular focus on Europe, and will present the new digitised collections of the historical archives of the European Launcher Development Organisation (ELDO) and the European Space Research Organisation (ESRO), joint forerunners of the European Space Agency.

Since the 1980s, within and beyond Europe we have witnessed widespread delegation of powers from governments directly elected by citizens to Non-Majoritarian Institutions (NMIs) that are neither directly elected nor directly managed by elected politicians (Thatcher and Stone Sweet 2002: 2). The institutional forms taken by NMIs include independent regulatory agencies tasked to oversee and facilitate competition (Thatcher 2002a; Coen and Thatcher 2005), central banks charged to conduct monetary policy (McNamara 2002), specialized constitutional courts (Stone Sweet 1989, 1992, 2000, 2002), and supranational bodies such as the European Commission (Wilks and Bartle 2002; Pollack 1997, 2003) and other international organizations (Nielson and Tierney 2003). Functional rationales for explaining delegation centered on the outcomes that these unelected bodies were expected to deliver better than elected politicians, and which included providing long-term commitments credible to investors, enhancing the efficiency of policymaking, and better dealing with highly technical areas (Levy and Spiller 1994; Majone 1996, 1997; Thatcher and Stone Sweet 2002). However, rather than technical, Pareto-efficient decisions (where some benefit and no one is made worse off), NMIs have increasingly taken political decisions with clearly distributive implications and both winners and losers. Furthermore, today, NMIs are commonly accused of having failed to deliver on their promises, having frequently led to rather unpopular outcomes (e.g., price rises, fiscal costs due to supervisory failures). This project takes these pressing, present-day political pressures as an opportunity to take stock of two or three decades of experience since the initial delegations. It focuses on post-delegation politics, which has been studied less than the design of delegation. It asks questions related to the ‘zone of discretion’ (i.e., discretion granted, minus controls set up), looked at both synchronically and diachronically. The project addresses these questions by engaging with three perspectives offering different theoretical expectations. The first is principal-agent, the dominant framework for studying delegation (Epstein and O’Halloran 1999; McCubbins et al. 1987). In line with rational choice approaches more generally, actors’ preferences are assumed to be stable and defined ex ante; changes therefore tend to be explained by referring to external shocks, such as events unexpected at the time of the initial delegation. An alternative is offered by more sociological logics (DiMaggio and Powell 1991). Here, the reasons why NMIs were set up in the first place had more to do with appropriateness than with expected functional advantages (McNamara 2002). Accordingly, NMIs largely created for symbolic reasons may then actually lead to unexpected functional outcomes or material impacts (Wilks and Bartle 2002). Moreover, subsequent alterations tend to be more endogenous, and relate in particular to changes in trends and fashions. Still another perspective, also more focused on endogenous change, is provided by historical institutionalism (Thelen 1999; Pierson 2000; Streeck and Thelen 2005). From this viewpoint, context, traditions and history matter, both in making similar formal structures operating in different ways (Thatcher 2002a, 2002b) and in conditioning subsequent institutional change (Thatcher and Coen 2008; Thatcher 2011).

In sum, this project aims at stimulating discussion about contemporary urgent problems and more subterranean long-term dynamics, in the light of different theoretical perspectives and the contributors’ respective empirical interests and expertise, which in turn offer a wide sample of NMIs across various polities.

Towards a circular economy: European ambitions and local contributions to improve the lives of citizens - Roundtable
Tuscany Region - Presidency, Palazzo Guadagni Strozzi Sacrati, Sala Pegaso, Piazza Duomo 10, Florence

The event aims at creating a debate around the interconnectedness between the future challenges of the green and circular economies of the European Union and their actual implementation at the regional and national level through EU structural and investment funds. The EU’s proposed measures to support a circular economy help companies and consumers undertake the transition towards a stronger economy, where resources are used in the most sustainable way possible. These political actions contribute to the improvement of recycling practices and have beneficial effects on both the economy and the environment, closing the cycle of life of all products. The aim is to use raw materials, products and waste efficiently, obtaining the maximum value while promoting energy saving and reducing greenhouse-gas emissions. Therefore, the Regions, in collaboration with national institutions, can and will consider themselves as guarantors of such measures at the local level. They will contribute to making the lives of their constituents greener and more sustainable.

The Tuscany Region recycles about 56% of waste produced. Their objective is to reach 70% by 2020 and 80% by 2023. The remaining 20% should be composed of 5% Mechanical Biological Treatment (MBT) waste, 7% incineration material and a remaining 8% residue for landfills. The projects aim at implementing 6 new biodigestors by 2022.

The traditional democratic model seems to be increasingly more incapable of responding to contemporary issues. Arguably, democracy as a concept is undermined by secessionist underlying political movements and by the authoritarian connotation of populist political actors. On top of all this, phenomena such as organised crime and corruption, along with the overwhelming presence of technology and of a global market, contribute to hinder the values and norms that determine a healthy democracy. In lights of the growth of a new supranational European democracy, the Fondazione Ernesto Balducci promotes a holistic evaluation of these contemporary issues.

The EUI Engaged Academics Working Group encourages debate on a constellation of gender-related questions. Starting from democracy as a promise for social inclusion, the side-event will take stock of the state of the Italian democracy in terms of gender equality, with a specific focus on the Florentine reality. ‘Disinformation’ and ‘inclusive democracy’ are two topics among the many discussed within the 2019 State of the Union edition. These two fundamental aspects of 21st century’s democracies concern particularly the realm of gender. In the labyrinth of disinformation on gender issues, the central dimension of human diversity becomes peripheral, or even, in some cases, dehumanised. The aim of this event is to put back the individual at the heart of (their) questions of gender, by listening to the knowledge and testimonies shared by those who, daily, have first-hand experience with gender-related situations. We will open a dialogue with experts in the field to shed some light on the notion of gender, gender relations, sex characteristics and sexualities. What is sex? What is gender? What is the difference between sexual orientation and gender identity? Who is a trans* person? Who are intersex people? The fear of the ‘other’ - perceived as ‘different’ - becomes frequently an opportunity for political instrumentalisation as well as one of the triggers... of harmful stereotypes, discriminations and violence. How to prevent bullying and discrimination in various social contexts, both institutional and non-institutional? What forms of help can be provided to the victims of gender-based discrimination, violence and ill-treatment? Experts from the fields of law, sociology, education and social services support will offer answers to and reflections upon these and many other questions. The discussion will be followed by a debate with the audience.

Three Priorities for EU Climate Action in the Coming Five Years – Online Debate

School of Transnational Governance (STG) and Florence School of Regulation (FSR), EUI – Online

Three Priorities for EU Climate Action in the Coming Five Years - What’s next for the EU’s Climate Policy?

What should the top priorities for European Climate Policy be within the changing political landscape (European Parliament elections, renewal of both the European Commission’s President and the European Council’s full-time President, Brexit)? What are the issues to be tackled next by the incoming EU leaders, and how might the UK retain its leadership role for climate action from outside the European Union? In this online debate, Baroness Worthington and Professor Delbeke, two senior policy-makers and academics with many years of experience in designing climate policies will share their “wish list” of the three top priorities for the EU’s Climate action for the next 5 years.

Illiberal challenges to the future of the political union - Conference

Institute of Human Sciences (IWM), Vienna – Sala di Lorenzo il Magnifico, Palazzo Vecchio

Europe and the European Union are confronted with one of their most serious challenges to date, that go to the very core of its values - challenges to its democratic political culture and the rule of law. In certain member states the far right has gained a foothold and authoritarian, sovereignist leaders are purporting to “save” Europe by bringing it back to its traditionalist (pre-Enlightenment) roots – a Europe in which “internationalism” will be subordinated to nation states.

This side event will discuss these issues during two consecutive panels. Speakers shall address these challenges in light of the concurrent internal and external challenges Europe and the EU are facing. Immigration and demographic angst and decline have been singled out as drivers of populist, nationalist, identitarian politics. The long period of peace in Europe seems to have blunted the political nerve endings of those standing for a democratic Europe. How strongly are they responding to the challenge? Will European democratic forces find the necessary energy and organizational capacity to counter these retrograde forces that threaten to bring back Europe’s dark times.
Panel 1: How damaging is the populist challenge to democracy?

Moderator:
Ivan Vejvoda, Institute for Human Sciences, Vienna

Speakers:
- Piotr Buras, European Council on Foreign Relations, Warsaw
- Gabor Halmai, European University Institute, Florence
- Gerald Knaus, European Stability Initiative, Berlin
- Rosa Balfour, German Marshall Fund, Brussels

Moderator:
Tim Judah, The Economist, London

Speakers:
- Luke Cooper, Anglia Ruskin University, London
- Stefan Lehne, Carnegie Europe, Brussels/Vienna
- Zsuzsana Szelenyi, Fmr Hungarian MP, Budapest

La Fura dels Baus - Free Bach 212
Fabbrica Europa – Stazione Leopolda

La Fura dels Baus is eccentricity, innovation, adaptation, rhythm, evolution and transgression. The incessant curiosity and the need to explore new artistic trends have developed, through a process of collective creation, a unique language, style and aesthetic. Nowadays, this is called “Furan language”, which has been implemented in different artistic genres, such as opera, cinema and large-scale performances. The ability to bind and adapt carnality and mysticism, nature and artifice, rudeness and sophistication, primitivism and technology, in every performance, has given the Spanish company its international success and prestige.

Free Bach 212 is a performance-concert of music and dance. It is based on BauernKantate (Peasant Cantata) BWV 212 by J.S. Bach, performed by the baroque ensemble Divina Mysteria, adding flamenco reprises by Mariola Membrives and combined with electronic music sound effects. The videowork veils the musicians, the bailaor, the singers and gives sense and perspective to the piece.

The imperative nature of the myth lies in its ability to bring clarity to the mechanisms of a classical conflict. Not by what the myth shows us, but by what it does not show. Without the everyday noise of news reports and opinion pieces, the view shown in the myth offers an insight into ancient souls. It is our archaic character that finds it impossible to become modern and raises hell. Wim Vandekeybus’ fascination for the universal nature of ancient myths was already demonstrated in the figures of Orpheus and Eurydice in Blush (2002). His new creation, TrapTown, takes you to a parallel universe, stripped of defined time and space. Primal conflicts dominate and the necessity and (im)possibility of emancipation rises to the surface.

The European Landscape Convention is an international normative document of great significance, as it has allowed to transform the notion of landscape and to bring it closer to the concept of the territory as a whole. The starting point of this change represents the achieved awareness of the landscape as a European heritage and a cultural, environmental, social and economic resource that contributes to the well-being and satisfaction of human beings and to the consolidation of the European identity.

Representing an important element of the quality of life of populations, the European Convention has established the widest possible participation in its management, setting out rights and responsibilities of public authorities and of each individual. The forms of participation range from protection actions to a more specific planning activities and are articulated in procedures that involve all interested parties, public and private, in the achievement of the quality of the landscape objectives.

The Participation in the European Landscape Convention is clearly inspired by a model of participatory democracy, because it finalizes all landscape activities to the achievement of the people’s aspirations in relation to the characteristics of their living environment, by setting up a bottom-up administrative procedure for the landscape protection. Such procedure should develop and emphasize from below the awareness of the value of landscape and its role as a key element for individual and social well-being.

Through collective dialogues and games, they will engage with City representatives, children and adults to transform the school into the first and most important practice of active citizenship.

Fabbrica Europa - Teatro della Pergola

Multi-instrumentalist (clarinets, saxophones, bandoneon, etc.) and composer Michel Portal (1935) can be considered the father of the French modern jazz scene. Classically trained, Portal gained recognition through his association with various modern and contemporary music composers. His performance as the featured soloist on Pierre Boulez’s Domaines remains a highlight of his career. However, this exceptional musician also has a serious interest in folk music and jazz. Théo Ceccaldi (1986) is a French violinist and composer. Revelation of the year (Franck Ténot prize) at Victoires de la Musique 2017, elected French Musician of 2016 and French Revelation of 2014 by Jazz Magazine, he surely figures as one of the most singular voices of the new European Jazz scene. He has been highly noticed for his collaboration with Orchestre National de Jazz (ONJ) as well as his numerous international collaborations. Over the last ten years, his thirst for new encounters and musical discoveries has led him to collaborate on a dizzying variety projects.
